One way in which technology has become harmful is the rise of what psychologists call the “online disinhibition effect.” In other words, it can breed insensitivity and callousness.